ELECTION LAW REVISION BEFORE THE ASSEMBLY

Not To Impose On The State
A "Chaos of New Laws"

TWO BILLS IN TONIGHT

Bill Also Introduced Which Will Fix Minimum Marriage
Age at Sixteen

By G. Ross Downing
(I.N.S. Staff Correspondent)

HARRISBURG, Pa., Feb. 14 (I.N.S.)—This is the beginning of the sixth week of the State Legislature and little more is known of what will eventually take place than that Governor Fisher has let it be known, through public utterances and private conversations, that he now sees little need for a long list of legislative enactments.

This assembly is meeting an often expressed desire for a Legislature which would not impose upon the State a chaos of new laws of which the majority of the State's citizens would remain in ignorance or which would add to present complexities.

An election law revision seems to be the most important to be considered by the assembly. Sentiment seems to be running rampant that it is imperative that a reform be had. However, it is probable Governor Fisher will confer with all of those having election legislation views. And, while preparing the Governor's suggestions, Deputy Attorney General William A. Schnader, is studying each bill introduced to see if its provisions embody the thoughts of the executive.

Several bills to accomplish what the Legislature believes necessary toward general tax revision were scheduled to be introduced tonight. These included three specific recommendations for general tax reduction; two proposals to lighten the burden of local taxation; commission suggestions for the merging of many specific funds in the treasury; increase in fees for heavy motor trucks and reduction of brokers license fees.

Two bills will come before the Senate for final action tonight. Both were on the third reading calendar last Tuesday but were held over. One of them, the McBride bill, would authorize district attorneys to employ fingerprint experts. The other, by the same author, would permit boards of viewers to employ and pay stenographers.

Included in the fifteen bills on the second reading calendar is that of Senator Salus which would permit the imposing of a death penalty or life imprisonment on bandits found in possession of deadly weapons.

A bill similar to one introduced in the House by Miss Helen Grimes, representative from Allegheny county, fixing the minimum marriage age at sixteen years is also on the second reading calendar, Senator Daix, Philadelphia, being its sponsor.

Another measure up for second consideration is that of Senator Kunkle, Westmoreland, providing for trial of criminal cases without a jury upon agreement between the defendant and the Commonwealth.

DR. EDWIN F. HAHN ORATOR AT HULMEVILLE

Delivers Patriotic Address At Weekly Meeting Of Men

MEN, WOMEN ATTEND

In the words of Dr. Edwin Forrest Hahn it speaks well for any community that can inaugurate and carry on such meetings as have been held in the Methodist Church, Hulmeville, each Sunday afternoon, for the past five weeks.

The series of meetings for men has attracted a large gathering each Sunday at 2:30, and the address delivered by Dr. Hahn, of Camden, yesterday, was of a patriotic nature, the subject being "The High Cost of Loving."

Dr. Hahn defined love as the greatest word in the world—"It is the key to the golden rule; and it is the one word that should be crowned and anointed in all the relationships of human life."

His talk was woven around four phases of love—love of country, more commonly known as patriotism; love of home—civilization; love of humanity—philanthropy; and love of God, or religion.

Speaking of citizens' love in relation to their country, he told how our forefathers paid the price without bickering or bargaining, and "we are reaping the returns. They paid the high cost of love." He warned the listeners not to put their "Americanism" on too low a plane, adding that "it is unsafe for an American citizen to trifle with the Constitution of the United States."

Citing incidents in the history of this great country he told that it is unsafe for Americans to think of patriotism or love of country in dollars and cents—"Our Pilgrim Fathers gave the price that a great cause always demands—love. It was so with Washington and his men at Valley Forge. Washington's love of country was not a spurious patriotism. He and his men fought not for the few paltry pennies they received. This patriotism holds true today if it is real love of country, and love of the United States is American manhood sound at the heart."

Referring to the next two kinds of love mentioned previously, Dr. Hahn stated that there is only one cost to pay for the American home, and that is the high cost of loving. Under philanthropy the work of the Red Cross was mentioned, it being said that no one can ever count the cost in philanthropic love. The speaker referred to Lincoln as "the greatest love of humanity America has ever known. He cited case after case of those who paid the high cost of loving humanity, and then incorporated all three of these loves in the love of God.

As a definition of love of God, there was given "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, and with all thy mind—and thy neighbor as thyself."

"It costs all your heart to love God—it costs all you have: mentality, time, money, strength, but the greatest patriots, philanthropists and home builders paid all they had to love God. We find that love is a universal speech—it is the language of God." And in closing, these words were spoken: "I plead with you men and women of America, to pay the high cost of loving God."

Two more meetings are being planned for the final session taking place on Sunday, February 27th. Music was furnished yesterday by an orchestra; and two selections were rendered by the church choir. Mr. and Mrs. Vance Wiggins, of Camden, N. J., delightfully sang two duets, in their usual pleasing manner. Mr. Charles Foster, of Hulmeville, accompanied with the violin for the various selections. The edifice was most attractive in its decorations of flags, arranged by James P. Balderston.

MEMORIAL MEETING

A Willard Memorial meeting of the Bristol Women's Christian Temperance Union will be held tomorrow evening at 601 Radcliffe street. The session will commence at 8 o'clock, and all members are asked to endeavor to be present.

SPIRIT OF LATE DR. SUN YAT SEN RETURNS AS DREAMS COME TRUE

It Was Sun Who First Dreamed of the March of the Cantonese
Against Northern Militarists—Set Up Southern Republic at Canton

Editor's Note: The following story is the first of a series of sketches of the leaders involved in China's civil war, written by Edna Lee Booker, an American newspaper woman who spent several years in China. As an International News Service staff correspondent, Miss Booker spent months in the field with Chinese armies and obtained first hand information on the real causes underlying the present struggle.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Feb. 14.—The spirit of Sun Yat-sen is carrying on! Sun Yat-sen, "the dreamer," is coming into his own. His dreams and visions, which were laughed at five years ago, are being realized with sensational rapidity in China today.

Of all the personalities playing a part in the fascinating drama of modern China, to me, the most forceful is the late Sun Yat-sen.

It was Sun who first dreamed of the march of the Cantonese against the northern militarists; who worked out a definite program for the reunification of chaotic China; who proclaimed "the three people theory" of a government "for, of and by the people."

Set Up Government

Because of his dreams, this far sighted man, who lived years ahead of his time, set up the Southern Republic at Canton in opposition to the Peking Government. He planted the Nationalistic acorn which has grown into a tremendous tree whose branches cast their shadows over a large portion of China today.

Sun made the first expedition against Peking. He was badly defeated and upon his return to Canton was driven from his home in the dead of night by rival Cantonese forces. He fled to one of his battleships anchored off Canton and the world proclaimed Sun to be down and out.

As correspondent for the International News Service, I interviewed him in his very insecure haven on a gunboat whose officers he feared might at any moment sell out to the enemy.

But Sun Yat-sen's invincible spirit was unconquered. He was living beyond the moment. He talked enthusiastically of a time when China would be over her growing pains and united in a Republic respected by the world. He made me see that Republic and forget—as he seemed to—that for the time he was virtually a prisoner.

Sun died. But—he was confident to the end that some day his vision of a greater China would be realized.

Many of his followers however, feared that with the passing of Sun the dreams would be forgotten.

Instead they have blazed forth with startling brightness and caused the spotlight of the world to be turned on China. Whether or not the Cantonese, who are now on the crest of the wave in China, carry on to Peking remains to be seen. And whether or not Sun's dream of a "China for the Chinese" will be lost in the luring music of the Soviet, time will have to tell.

Eugene Chen, the mind back of the Cantonese advance; General Chiang Kai-shek, the leader of the Nationalist army of the south and General Feng Yu-shiang, so called Christian General, in command of allies in the north have been successful up to date.

But will they be able to completely wipe out General Wu Pei-fu, who is even now planning a come back campaign to recapture Hankow and Kuchang? Will they succeed in overthrowing Marshal Sun Chuan-fang, the powerful warlord who holds the keys to Shanghai? Will they oust Marshal Chang Tiao-lin, the Mukden war-lord, who has survived many a hard blow during his spectacular career, from his hold on Peking and Manchuria?

Whether or not the Cantonese are successful in their present campaign they have put themselves on the map of China. It is up to them to prove that they are strong enough to set up a government which will embrace and represent all China. This cannot be done in a day. There are many gigantic obstacles in the way of the immediate establishment of a government "for, of and by the people" of China.

But through all the present chaos I seem to see the spirit of Sun Yat-sen, one of the founders of the Republic of China, marching hopefully on into the future.

PROTEST AGAINST A HIGHWAY DEPT. RULING

Law Permits Police To Punch
Licenses for Alleged Violations

LEGALITY CONSIDERED

PITTSBURGH, Feb. 14 (I.N.S.)—Protests against the State Highways Department's new ruling which permits State Police to punch motorists' operators license for alleged violations of the traffic code, have become so numerous, it was learned here today, that the rule may be suspended.

Automobile associations here which have communicated their opposition to the rule to the highways department were informed that the legality of the rule is now being considered by the Attorney General's office. Until an opinion is forthcoming, the rule will be enforced.

Chief opposition to the new rule was based on what its opponents claim is virtually granting police the additional power of magistrates, to adjudge alleged violations guilty.

Judge Irwin Cummins, of Washington County Court, one of the best known jurists in Western Pennsylvania, has declared from the bench that in his belief the rule is unconstitutional, because it violates the right of trial.

BLAME SHORT CIRCUIT

Flames Spread To Residence
Of Henry Spangler, Next Door

One house was burned to the ground and another was partially destroyed at Cornwells Heights, Saturday afternoon. The conflagration started at about 4:15 o'clock, in the house occupied by Frank Kucowski, along the river front.

Upon going into the cellar of her home, Mrs. Kucowski saw a blaze alongside the electric light meter, and called for her husband. Mr. Kucowski later told that upon descending to the cellar he saw sparks flying from the meter, and he is under the impression that the blaze was caused by a short circuit.

Before the fire companies could be summoned, the entire house was ablaze; and the house occupied by Henry Spangler next door also caught fire. The Cornwells Heights and Croydon fire companies did good work, saving the Spangler home from being burned to the ground.

Nothing was saved, however, at the Kucowski house, and the loss on the building is estimated at $2,500; furniture, $500, and clothing, $200. The structure was owned by Shute and Koerting

LOVE AND ROMANCE

The lover who sent the first Valentine ranks with the inventor of Santa Claus, among the Great Unknowns of history.

Few men have done as much to make this a joyous world. Surely no one has done more to color life with romance.

No life is worth while unless it attracts and radiates love.

And the Valentine is the messenger of Cupid.

If you are on the shady side of youth, there are few memories you can look back to, with the thrill and tenderness of the valentines of school days.

Sometimes we wonder what became of those first sweethearts of youth—the shy little lassie in the gingham pinafore, the sweetheart of the old-time sleighride, the romantic love of our late 'teens and early twenties.

You remember those valentines you sent them? "Them was the days." Looking backward, the valentine days are rosy lanterns in the mists of the past.

Those greatest sweethearts, our wives, may be getting gray. But the old-time love is in their hearts. The thrill of a valentine to them is as tense and glamorous as long ago. This is Valentine Day, and all sweethearts, white-haired or young, yearn for remembrance—violets, candy or, best of all, an honest-to-goodness valentine.

ALL BUSINESS HAZARDOUS

Dirt-farmer congressman often overshoot the mark in their insistence that the goose hangs high for everybody who does not have hanging around his neck a millstone in the nature of a farm. The world is not all milk and honey and rose-strewn paths for urban dwellers.

During January of this year there was a higher total of business failures than in any other single month since 1922. The January failures numbered 2,465, with liabilities of $51,290,232. In a year business insolvencies reach a total in liabilities of approximately $500,000,000.

In the fierce struggle for survival thousands of business enterprises go under year after year, demonstrating that contrary to the claim of those demanding farm aid not all who strive for a living in trade and manufacturing find a broad and unobstructed highway leading to success.

When one business man succeeds and another fails under precisely similar conditions, the failure is charged to individual shortcomings. But when inequality is found in the outcome of the efforts of farmers, one investing money and another borrowing more than he can repay, the middle-man, market conditions, society, high tariffs and everything else but the bankrupt farmer are blamed.

There is that eternal argument of the proponents of farm aid that if the farmers do not prosper the consuming public, which omits no class nor individual, must suffer. But one may doubt if modern man would find it much more convenient to go without clothing and fuel than to go without food. However, the fact remains that the politicians have never been bold enough to demand government loans and subsidies for the merchant or manufacturer with a business deficit.

It is hard to tell whether a wild looking man is writing spring poetry or making out his income tax.

Echoes of the Past

Items of Interest as Gleaned from old files of Bucks County Newspapers

According to a story taken from a fifty-year-old publication of "The Intelligencer" bearing date of Saturday, February 3, 1877, Eastburn Reeder, a well-known Bucks county farmer, received from the Centennial judges a certificate for their award to him of a diploma for the best exhibit of butter. Mr. Reeder's butter ranked as high as 98 points out of a possible hundred. Two or three Chester county exhibitors considered their own awards of from 92 to 95 points as about as high as could be obtained.

A petition which was signed by a very large number of people in favor of better mail facilities on the whole route between Doylestown and Bristol was sent from Newtown to the Post Office Department with the hope of obtaining better mail service between the two points.

Residents of Hulmeville were pleased to learn that operations in the cotton factory at that place which had not been in operation for almost a year, were again about to be resumed. A Mr. Irvin, of Philadelphia, was about to assume charge of the factory.

Newtown Enterprise, published February 6, 1892, contained the following items of interest:

The total indebtedness of the Doylestown Exhibition Company was placed at $10,661.50, and the treasurer reported a balance in his hands of $29.61. Of the thirty-eight gentlemen placed in nomination for managers for the next year all withdrew their names.

CHAPTER XII TAKE IT FROM ME

ON the Monday morning that Crabb had seen the sign in the right of the main door of the store reading: "This store closed for one month for alterations," he had been full of glee; that is, as full of glee as Cyrus ever became. His capacity for glee was very limited. Either it had never existed or it had never been developed, and Miss Abbott was with him, as usual. Pointing to the sign and rubbing his skinny hands together, he cackled:

"That's the sign I have been waiting for. It will cost that young Jackanapes less to keep the store closed than to run it at the tremendous loss he must have had. Wish I knew the exact figures. McLennon, Simms & Sockett told me of the ridiculous orders that he has placed—corkscrews, earlards of them; cocktail shakers, I never had one in the place since prohibition; horse blankets, they'll rot on his hands; a whole steamer load of Paris dresses; they change their minds so often over there that a cablegram makes a Paris dress old-fashioned before it can be shown in the store. We always set the fashion for this town ourselves and it is the only safe way. I suppose I can make handkerchiefs out of them, when I get the store, if there is enough material." And Cyrus was well pleased at his little joke and the prospect itself. Miss Abbott had never seen him in such confident and entertaining mood. Just then she caught sight of the sign in the other side of the main door. It read:

From basement to roof, the entire store had been done over. Every fantastic idea that cost money had been worked into the decorations. All the big white pillars had been gilded, and it was rumored about the store crowds that they had all been painted in ten-carat gold paint. Huge floral arches were erected over the aisles, and the ceilings had all been gaily painted. Gay bunting, streamers, tapestries and costly looking paintings were everywhere. A famous interior decorator had been given carte blanche to carry out the designs that had been selected as the result of a nation-wide call for unique ideas, and he had been given plenty of money to use as he saw fit. The store had already received a tremendous amount of publicity from the description of the designs and the lavish manner in which they had been carried out. For days the best photographers in the city had been photographing their heads off. Full pages of rotogravure had appeared not only in the city papers, but throughout the whole United States.

From the prima donna who had almost broken Tom early in his spending career, he had obtained one idea which he had used effectively, as well as the use of an entire chorus, otherwise stranded in the middle of the summer. This idea had to do with lights. By the use of spots and flood lights Tom was able to change the entire tone and atmosphere of the main floor. Hundreds of revolving disk used in the lenses gave the effect of moving patterns on the floor, on the beflagged ceiling and on the walls. The flowers in the latticed archways

"If the thing blows up—would it make a difference to you," asked Tom. "whether I was a failure or a success?"

WILL REOPEN NEXT MONTH WITH $2,500,000.00 PARIS FASHION SHOW

In alarm, she pointed it out to Crabb. At first Cyrus could not believe his eyes. He took out his handkerchief and wiped the horn-rimmed glasses. The sign was big enough. It was plain enough. It was definite enough. Cyrus had no choice but to believe.

"Two and a half million dollars!" He said it under his breath, almost with reverence. Alarm had also crept into his countenance and his voice. "Is it possible, Ella, that the decimal point is wrong in that sign? Why this is terrible. It will ruin the company. The man's a lunatic. Two and a half millions of dollars. Why he hasn't got it. The company hasn't got it. It's ruin, bankruptcy, disgrace."

Poor Crabb all but tore his hair. His suffering was terrible to behold. Miss Abbott, the only spectator, was almost as perturbed as Crabb. Together they hammered on the door. Then they ran around like two frightened rabbits to the employees entrance. But the place was absolutely deserted and securely locked. Crabb, who had come especially to gloat over how well the new sign, "CRABB & CO." would look, was now almost on the point of countermanding the order.

The formal opening of the redecorated and rejuvenated Eggett & Co. store had been heralded by full-page advertisements in all the papers for two weeks. To Tom's surprise he found that he could spend money faster on advertising than he could on almost anything else in his attempt to be extravagant with "Crabb's Inheritance," as the boys had begun to call the business—when Grace was not around. To Grace this seemed a criminal waste of money, but Tom had discovered in himself a remarkable faculty of making Grace believe that you had to spend money to get money. Where he had heard the phrase he did not know, but it was certainly the motto of the new store.

changed color before the wondering eyes of the crowds, and by using huge sprays of perfume, delicate appeal was made to still another sense.

If Tom thought that he had had crowds at his bargain sales the first days of his management, he soon concluded that they were not a patch on the crowds which came to see this marvel of a store. And whereas the first crowds were bargain hunters, these were the most fashionably dressed, socially prominent and well-to-do in the city. Over night, Eggett's had jumped from a conservative low-end-in-the-city-priced store to the most enterprising, up-to-the-minute and expensive store in the country—and Tom had seen to it this time that there were no bargain prices. Of course, from his own standpoint and following out the theory on which all this spending of money had been based, which was to leave nothing at all for Crabb when the three months was up, Tom did not care if he did not sell a thing. But he had to use some diplomacy. He could not let Grace know he was wrecking the store. So the prices were high. But Tom told Grace that he was catering now to people who had money and who wanted to spend it. "The more you ask the more you will get, and all we have to do is to make them think it is the fashionable thing to spend it at Eggett's," said Tom, and Grace again had believed him. So persuasive was he in regard to Grace that she was really coming to admire his business judgment and sagacity.

"You know, Tom," said Grace, as they were giving the store a final once-over on the day of the opening, "I never thought you would be a business man. I decided that the first time I saw you trying to dictate a letter. But some way you have developed amazingly. Many of your plans and theories are too deep for me, but you have so much faith in them that I cannot help believing that they will succeed. And how I hope that they will. Everyone in the store is strong for you. They would do anything in the world to see that this store is a big success. One of the best things you ever did was to send the sales people away for a vacation. They can't do enough for you now, and won't we all be proud if you succeed?" Grace and Tom were holding hands as she said this. In spite of the fact that Tom's engagement to Gwen was still recognized as binding, it was forgotten in moments like this.

"And if I don't succeed," said Tom, looking at the enthusiastic, confident girl with an expression in his serious face she had never seen there before. "If the thing blows up and people don't do as we plan for them to do—what then? Would it make a big difference to you whether I was a failure or a success?" And Tom was never more in earnest than when he asked that question.

"You could never be a failure—to me," came back in sweetly confident tones and from a head so bowed over that he had to lift the chin to look into the face. Had it not been for an interruption, it is certain that Tom would have forgotten all about his engagement to Miss Gwendolyn Forsythe.

And now the people were coming into the store in gaily dressed parties. Everywhere were wondering exclamations of delight at the surprises of this marvelous store. The sales people were dressed as though it were a fancy dress ball or a masquerade. Even the floorwalkers were in fancy dress. Percy was strutting about in doublet and hose, and trying desperately to keep from tripping over a property sword. But no one took any notice of him, and for once he had no flower to present to Grace. And still he was as happy as a dumbfaced floor-walker can look. In fact, the only one in the store who did not look happy and as though he were enjoying himself was Crabb. He had come in with every expectation of being deeply grieved. He was. He had every outward appearance of a near relative reviewing the remains. But inwardly he was a raging tempest. He was looking for Tom.

Grace was standing in the centre aisle, directing people and acting as hostess, and a charming hostess she looked, every inch of her. The most beautiful of all the dresses which had come from Paris, Tom had insisted that she wear. The store people who had only seen her in the simple things she wore to business, marveled at the exquisite loveliness of the girl in the latest creation of Paganini. So did the customers. Many were the admiring looks she received from the men as from the women as they came into the store. And they looked at the face rather than the gown, too.

In spite of the fact that there were huge signs directing people to the Fashion Show, it was Grace's duty, and a necessary one, to see that they kept moving on in that direction. Presently she saw Crabb enter the store and gaze around as though his eyes hurt him. He even went so far as to wring his hands, all unconscious of the fact that he was making a spectacle of himself before one who knew well his deep interest in the welfare of the store. Crabb stood right in front of Grace and did not know her. He was following the crowd into the Fashion Show, groaning at every step.

"The men's style show, Mr. Crabb, is over that way. Right through that archway." Recalled to himself, Crabb looked at Grace and actually smiled because this beautiful creature had spoken to him. Then suddenly it dawned on him that this was the stenographer that he had discharged.

"Humph," he grunted. "You here still? You won't be long. Where's young Eggett?"

"At your service, sir." It was Tom. He had seen Crabb enter and had been amused both at his expression and because he had not recognized Grace. Now he was particularly bland and good natured toward the man whose discomfiture he so much enjoyed. "We can talk here. I have no business secrets from Miss Gordon, and she has kept none of the secrets of this business from me."

The significance of this remark was not lost on Crabb. He glowered at Grace as though he would like to utterly annihilate her.

"Then you can understand my interest in the affairs of this store," he declared, in an obvious effort to keep his temper.

"I'm sorry I can't see your interest. If you ever had one, it certainly is gone by this time." Grace was busy telling people where to go. She was out of earshot. Tom could not forbear to bait Crabb.

"You mean the store will be gone? Great heavens, are you crazy? Say, how did you raise the money for all this tonifoolery?" He was rapidly getting excited.

"Oh, very easy," replied Tom airily. "I mortgaged the whole shebang." "How much?" asked Crabb. "Three millions."

"All that," gasped Crabb. "And what have you done with it?" "That's all I could get and I have spent every nickel of it already." Then the pent-up volcano inside of Crabb really exploded. Calling Tom everything he could think of in the line of impudence, he finally tottered off to the door with a threat. "I'll put a stop to this criminal waste of money. I'll get out an injunction." WHEN RADIO TURNS NAVIGATOR

Radio Direction Finder Guides and Locates Vessels at Sea in Fair and Foul Weather.

"Unable to give position—last bearings taken three days ago—we're lost!"

Thus reads the terse but dramatic message from a ship in distress. Out in the blackness of the night, pitching and tossing on waves stirred to a frenzy by the wintry gale, are fellow mariners and passengers, far off the traveled ocean lanes and all but lost save for the slender thread of radio communication.

"Keep sending us test signals," flashes back our operator. "Will locate by direction finder." And so the latest wonder of marine radio and the newest aid to modern navigation is brought into play.

Soon our operator is at the radio direction finder in the pilot house. A moment later he is wearing the headphones and manipulating the receiver dials. He begins turning the hand-wheel, which serves to swing the small loop frame on the deck above into the very teeth of the angry gale. The operator listens intently; the captain and other silently stand nearby; the swings of the hand-wheel become shorter and shorter. Here it is—the line of signals—the direction of their passage through space from the radiating point! But on which side of our ship—in what sense? Now the operator throws a switch, swings the hand-wheel again. The swings become shorter until they virtually stop. The operator now bends down as he peers through a magnifying glass, squinting an eye so as to line up the parallel lines which will give an accurate reading from the compass card below. Then he gives the reading to the pilot of the ship. A few moments later the course is changed, and the ship throbs to the command of full speed ahead in the face of a heavy sea.

How Compass Works

One hour, two hours, three hours—and our ship comes within searchlight range of the vessel in distress. A rescue is out of the question in such a rough sea, but we stand-by, ready to act if absolutely necessary.

Just as the dog turns his ears in determining the direction of sounds so does the radio direction finder turn its loop to get a bearing on a given transmitter. This ingenious radio device operates on the principle that a given signal of maximum intensity will be received with a loop so placed that its plane is pointing at the radio station which is transmitting. If, on the other hand, the plane of the loop lies at right angles to the direction of the radio transmitter, no energy is picked up and nothing can be heard in the carphones. The position at which the signal drops out, or so-called minimum, is well defined and is employed in reading the direction of the transmitting station from the compass card.

The standard marine direction finder, as now installed on many ships, is entirely self-contained and occupies less than two square feet of floor space. In the pilot house or chart room. On the deck, above the pilot house or chart room, is the sturdy tripod frame supporting the loop which is encased in bakelite tubing with aluminum alloy fittings. The protective tubing of the loop measures 4½ inches in diameter, while the loop measures 30 inches on a side. A 2 to 1 reduction gear, operating by the vertical hand-wheel, serves to swing the loop in all directions, even in high gales, without backlash or interference.

Service Now Universal
So important is the direction finder in navigation that radio beacons, like lighthouses and lightships, have come into existence along our coasts as in fallible guides to coastwise and trans-oceanic and lake navigators. These radio beacons, operated by the U. S. Lighthouse Service, now extend up and down the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, along the Gulf of Mexico, and on the Great Lakes, as well as in Alaska and Hawaii.

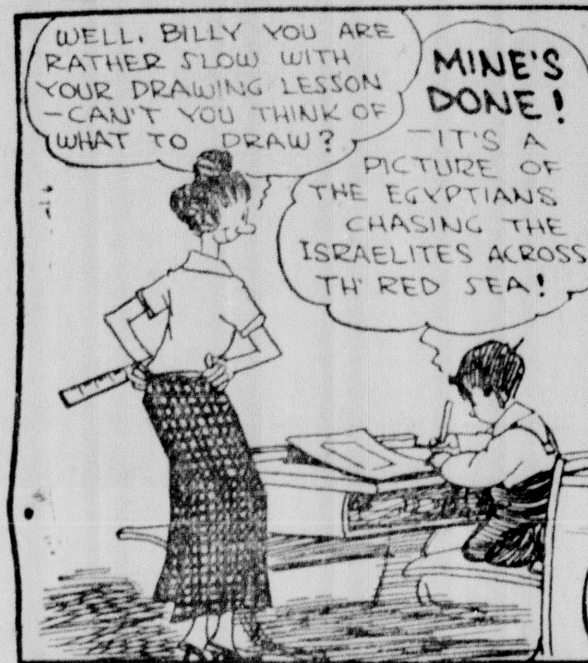

Operated on regular schedule, the radio beacons are also pressed into service when weather conditions warrant steady operation. Operating on 1,600 meters wavelength assigned for such radio transmission by international regulation, the ICW or interrupted-continuous-wave transmitters employed send out signals that vary in note and in character, so that each beacon may be readily identified. Heretofore, all radio beacons have been operated at the same time, causing considerable and troublesome interference because of the unified wavelength. This interference has been eliminated, however, through the use of synchronized clock switches, which now cause each radio beacon to transmit alone for a given time, so that just one beacon will be sending out direction-finding signals in a given locality.

"Invariably, navigators are enthusiastic in their praise of the direction finder, which, in many cases, has taken precedence over the time-honored sextant in determining a ship's position, even when ideal weather prevailed," according to T. M. Stevens of the Radio Corporation of America. "In foggy and cloudy weather, of course, the radio direction finder serves to solve what has hitherto been a serious predicament. Where soundings are impractical along steep coasts, because of great depths a short distance off shore, navigators have used the radio direction finder and their known speed in guiding their ships along."

TRENT THEATRE

The Trent Theatre Stock Company at the Trent Theatre, Trenton, introduces its new leading man, John Glyn McFarland, with the presentation of "Blind Youth" the week beginning Monday, February 14. Long a prime favorite in Trenton, Mr. McFarland returns after a succession of triumphs at Kansas City and St. Louis. He will play the Lou Tellegen role in "Blind Youth."

"Blind Youth" is a vivid and virile drama of a young artist who has tasted the bitterness of loving an unworthy woman and who reaches the lowest depths only to be rescued through the love of a woman of a very different sort. The Trent Company pays special attention to filling out of town phone orders for seat reservations.

Vital news

Nothing so vitally concerns you in everyday life as the urge and necessity to buy or sell—to give or take—to borrow or exchange. Look through the advertisements of this paper and you will find that they embody the chief impulses of living.

The nation's life is clearly depicted in the national advertising.

Our individual lives depend upon this advertising to a remarkable degree.

A newspaper is a clearing-house for ideas and commodities. Reports of the shifting phases of life come to you through its news and editorial columns. But reports of the material things upon which you depend for sustenance, comfort and happiness come through the advertisements.

If you read only one side of the paper, you gain only a half-knowledge of the activities, the aims, the character of the community.

Read all and learn all.
